Á Á Featured ArticleSuper Flex StrategyÁ ÁMon Jun 6 11:12am ETBy JEFF PAUR @jeffpaurs Fantasy WriterOne new scoring system that has become very popular in fantasy circles is super flex. This is a league that starts two flex positions but one can be a quarterback. This means you can have two starting quarterbacks in your lineup on a weekly basis. If you have never done one of these drafts, I highly recommend it (click here to see all the super flex options on our site). This is a totally different way to draft a fantasy team. There is actually an emphasis on the quarterback position. You will see quarterbacks picked early and often.Á Á In super flex formats, there are six quarterbacks with an ADP 20 or below. If you compare that to a standard PPR league, there is not one quarterback with an ADP below 20 and the first quarterback off the board is Josh Allen at 26.34. And when quarterbacks go that early, the dynamic of the draft is totally different. This makes for some interesting choices, especially early in your draft. Players normally picked in the first round can fall all the way into the third because of quarterbacks flying off the board.Á Á The league lineup devalues running back and receiver a little, having the ability to play a quarterback at one of the flex spots. And as mentioned, you will want to do that. Think about it.
