Football is perhaps the most elementary sport of the team. Two teams, each with 11 players (including the goalkeeper) work to push a ball into the objective of the opposing team using any part of their body different from their hands or arms. At the end of the two periods of 45 minutes, any team marked the greatest number of objectives win the game. Direct physical contact (push, control, grab, etc.) is not allowed. The springs are played on a field (often called a step) marked on all four sides with white border lines. A typical field is 100 yards and at least 50 meters wide, although some fields are larger. If the ball crosses the line on the sides of the field, it is returned to play through a two-handed high shot, the only situation in which a player doesn't goalkeeper can use hands. If it comes out of the game through a final line, it returned to play with the goalkeeper that succeeds (if the offensive team played it) or from a corner kick from the attacking team (if the defenders played). The goal is eight long meters and eight high feet. The ball must completely cross the final line between the target posts to be counted as a goal. Directly in front of each goal is a large rectangle called the target area. If a defense player commits him in this area, the attacking team receives a penalty kick. This is a free shot to the goal with only the goalkeeper to defend him, from ten yards.fouls committed elsewhere in the field can cause a variety of sanctions. The minor crimes, as unintentionally touching the ball with his hands, tripping or in possession of an opponent or who calculate the ball while it is in the air and dangerously close to the heads of the people is in a kick of punishment for the other team. This change of possession usually happens quickly and maintains the game in motion. More flagrant failures can cause cards. Serious or repeated fouls, fighting, lack of respect for officials and intentional fouls give referee the option to issue a yellow card to the offensive player. This is like a warning - the REF takes a real yellow card from your pocket and keeps it in the air to let everyone know that you sie. He then writes the player's number in a notebook. A yellow card has no immediate effect, but if the same player receives another yellow card in the same game (and sometimes within the same tournament), he gets an automatic red card. A red card translates into expulsion from the game, and that player's team cannot replace it, forcing them to play shortly for the rest of the game. Extreme crimes can lead to an immediate red card, regardless of whether or not a previous yellow card has been released. The goalkeeper can freely use his hands to capture, block and launch the ball within the goals area. He can go beyond the goals area, but he has to use his feet to move the ball. The watch in a soccer game is continuous. If the game stops due to an injury or another delay, the referee keeps track of lost time. At the end of each half, the referee will add this extra time, known as lesion times, after the watch is exhausted. If a match ends in a tie, the decision will depend on where and because the game is played. In friendly games and regular championship games, the game ends simply and each team is credited with a tie, it is worth a point in the ranking in the league. In some tournaments, the teams play two games against each other (several days away) and the winner is determined by target targets marked. This can make a tie as bad as a loss for one Then behind the goals. In some tournaments, a tie is resolved with a shootout. This is a series of five rigor kicks, with the teams alternated with kicks. The team that marks the greatest number of goals with their five winning kicks. The soccer ball itself is a swollen sphere made of synthetic leather. The real leather has been used in the past, but has a tendency to absorb water, making the ball very heavy in wet conditions. Most balls are covered by sewn panels. Inside it is a fabric lining and a rubber bladder that holds the air [Source: soccer football flask Players wear minimal equipment. Shin Pads and shoes cutting coupons on natural grass make up the march needed by most players. Many goalkeepers wear padding and handle gloves, and goalkeeper trousers and shirts can have stitched padded panels for protection when you enter a hard terrain to save. When a nine-year-old girl is guided by the soccer field, the only thing she is probably thinking is trying to score the goal more worthy of the benefit. She is she who is not thinking about: being driven out of the game because she wears beaded braids. It is the real kicker but: according to Thinkpress, Zvovushe-Ramos played with Ayso for five years, and is showing the same hairstyle for most of his games - braids along the right side of his face, fixed at the ends with small pearls of plastic. The style had never presented a problem before, but at the beginning of his game last weekend, the referee said that unless he removed the beads, he would have to sit the game. From the use where does this ref? According to the Ayso rules, "metal and plastic hair clips are not allowed in the field for practice or during a game.
